WEDNESDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 8, 1860. JUDICIAL ATTACK ON CRINOLINE .- A case lately came before an English magistrate wherein he took occasion to make a most ungallant tilt at the present expansive fashion | ward, and others, defendants, rendered on the of ladies' dresses. He proceeds in this style: 13th of October, 1859, the undersigned as Commis-"I have often felt it my duty to express in terms of the strongest disapproval, my opinion upon this fashion called crinoline. I had entertained the hope that the many accidents which have arisen from its use, coupled with the ridicule which a witty member of the press has thrown upon it, would have led to its discontinuance by those who should set the example of a modest and suitable attire. Far from this being the case, and I have come to the conclusion that, since of sale, the purchaser giving bond, with good perbut gains it votaries, from intellectual ladies to illiterate scullery maids, it is necessary to take some other means for its immediate suppression. It is to be tolerated no longer, that, through its vile and indecent agency, the characters of honest men are to be brought into question, and the name of women to be held up to youth as the mindless follower of immodesty and shamelessness. I shall now direct the officers of the court to bring before me those who are guilty of following this loathsome fashion; and if through this agency the practice cannot be put a stop to, the power of public opinion is indeed small. I trust the press will furnish space for these remarks, and will also assist my endeavors by giving the utmost publicity to the cases, if any, that are brought

How a DRUGGIST SOLD PURE LIQUOR .- A story is told of a druggist in Chicago, to this most elegant brandy, imported expressly for himself all the way from France. Of course he was supposed to keep it solely for family purposes, and for "nothin' else." There was, however, a cask kept on tap in a back room, and it was really astonishing what a ly, and how much sickness there was in the city while that cask, like the "widow's cruse," was always full. One day-a snapping cold day-about lunch time, several thirsty heads of families might have been seen in that back room anxiously waiting for the druggist, who was dealing out boluses in the front shop, to come in and draw some of the genugrin, but stands petrified to find that the thing don't run. "Something is the matter off." Druggist takes it off, but although the Beginning on the north side of Cameron street, His customers propose to take out the line of Wm. N. Brown, formerly Thompson's. bung and see what the matter is. Bung is taken out and cask turned to the light, when the horrifying fact presents itself to the naked eye that this unadulterated brandy, imported from France, is frozen solid. Too much water killed the brandy. Two GIRLS RESCUED FROM AUSTRALIAN
